

This woodblock print illustration, likely from a Japanese book, depicts two figures in traditional courtly attire. The figure on the left is seated, wearing a patterned robe with a yellow sash. The figure on the right is standing, also in a patterned robe with a yellow sash, and is holding a small object. The background shows architectural elements like sliding doors (shoji) and a railing. There is Japanese text integrated into the scene, including a large vertical inscription on the left and smaller text near the figures.

Handwritten Japanese text in cursive (sōsho) style, including a large character resembling '斗' (Tō) and other illegible characters.

