Collaboration	We met for two class periods in Quarter 3. After preparation in their individual classes, students from all the classes, plus a few extra Japanese student volunteers, were mixed and split into Zoom breakout rooms for about 1 hour each session. The students had specific assignments from their own teachers for language practice and cultural exchanges. Roughly half of the time was spent interacting in Japanese and roughly half in English.
How to evaluate students' learning outcomes	Observed participation (Nanzan students were in the classroom with their teachers) and reports.
Comment	The Dickinson College instructors were very flexible and accommodating and the exchanges went smoothly thanks in a great degree to their efforts. Their students attended the sessions in the evening in their local time so as to accommodate our class times in Japan. The Nanzan students responded very positively to the exchanges and appreciated the chances to get to talk to peers in another country.
